

The Autumn Statement 2022

Modern universities make up over half of the UK's higher education sector, educating over a million students a year and make a huge contribution to their regional economies as anchor institutions, generating £17bn in expenditure-related gross value add (GVA) as a result of their economic activity. These institutions are also drivers of social mobility and an important cog in the Government's levelling up agenda.

Although it is being delivered amidst a difficult economic environment, the Government should reaffirm or implement the following proposals in the Autumn Statement to support our world-leading universities and boost the skills agenda.

Universities play a vital role in a country's economic success, driving growth, fuelling innovation and knowledge exchange and providing a highly-skilled workforce to boost levelling up, with the majority of research at modern institutions assessed as world-leading or internationally excellent.

The Government should recommit to investing £20bn every year in research and development by 2024–25.

Higher education institutions in England continue to deliver world-class teaching and research against a backdrop of economic uncertainty. By 2024–25 the £9,250 annual tuition fee will only be worth £6,600 in 2012–13 prices.¹ The Government must at least maintain the current unit of resource for higher education to ensure universities can help to deliver the skills agenda.

Analysis from MillionPlus's recent Learning with the Lights Off report shows that nearly 300,000 students will be at risk due to the cost-of-living crisis, with traditionally underrepresented groups in higher education hit the hardest. The Government should implement an immediate increase to maintenance funding for students, ideally in the shape of maintenance grants, and ensure students are included in any further cost-of-living measures introduced.

The impact of the pandemic highlighted the importance of our key public services, particularly the need for a robust and resilient NHS. To build on what we have learned, and to ensure the UK is better prepared in the future, the Government should invest in high quality placements in the NHS, social work and teaching to enable a pipeline of skilled workers throughout our public services.

As we emerge from the pandemic it is vital we have a flexible post-18 education system, able to meet the challenges of an ever-changing economy and support current and future learners into new and exciting careers. Modern universities are well placed to step up and deliver the courses our economy needs, so the Government must recommit to the Lifelong Loan Entitlement and ensure we have a skills system that delivers for people and for economic growth.
